SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

WASHINGTON, MARCH 4.

STATE OF VIRGINIA AS A CENTRAL.

The history of everybody this morning seemed to be that a new chapter is to be written in American history to-day at noon. There was no occasion for such an act to succeed soon after, but a moment of such a crisis as was thrown to arouse public interest. Hence the throng of spectators, which crowded every part of the Senate Chamber and the galleries of the House. Members were in their seats in the Senate at an early hour, and the galleries began to fill up. Every foot of space was occupied by the time the Senate was called to order. Even the floor of the House was crowded with spectators, who had their tickets of admission to enable them to witness the trial, and this had increased the floor and general presence of all visitors so as to what was really going on.

IN THE SENATE.

Those in the House gathered watched the movements of the different Managers, as from to time they appeared at their seats and moved off again to their committee room, with such papers as they were working.

IN THE SENATE.

The Senate galleries were well filled, and great attention was paid to all that was passing. Four chairs were placed in front of the desk and facing the President, were the only indications that anything out of the usual routine was to occur. The routine of business during the morning hour was as dull as ever, but at short intervals every eye in the gallery was turned to that row of elegant chairs as if they possessed the power of fascination. Though no visible effect was produced upon the countenance of any Senator by the gathering of the Managers in the area
